ALL KIDS COUNT SCENARIOS

SCENARIO #1

A six-month-old baby boy was born to a young single mom who has aged out of foster care. She is raising the baby on her own without support, and there is little parent-child interaction or stimulation. The baby's father is not involved. Mom's boyfriend is not bonding with the infant and becomes annoyed when he cries. The mother and her boyfriend fight a lot; sometimes he throws things and it gets physical, especially when they use alcohol and drugs. The mother works part-time and, when she does, different people watch the baby. She struggles to maintain stable housing, forcing her to "couch surf".

SCENARIO #2

A first grade girl did not score well on her school readiness assessment in kindergarten and is struggling to read. Her parents did not graduate high school and work low-income jobs; they do not have family health insurance and they speak limited English. The family struggles to make ends meet, especially when rent is due. This means there is not always enough food to eat. Little time is spent on reading, and there are few books in the home.

SCENARIO #3

An 11-year-old girl is being bullied by a group of girls at school. She is frequently absent from school due to headaches and stomachaches. She has been seen by her pediatrician numerous times but they cannot find a medical cause. She is spending more and more time alone in her room, and her parents notice she is on her cell phone and computer a lot.

SCENARIO #4

A 15-year old boy is being raised by his grandmother. The grandmother's new job required them to move, and she now works the second shift. He transferred to a different school and has had difficulty making friends. He has become defiant and started skipping school. In the last few weeks, he has been caught vaping multiple times.
